meet the women who make dentistry a gas

TALK about TOOTHsome!

The dentist's office takes some pretty bad knocks. After all, it is that creepy, anti-septic cell where, facing a gleaming array of pointy appliances, you're forced to endure procedures that may be better suited to the extraction of national security information. Ah, but that daunting recliner next to the small, bubbling sink also puts you front row-center for one of life's great underrated pleasures—the species known as the dental assistant.

She is a vision in white, and every bit the woman: often alluring, frequently intrusive, always intense. Her job is to probe, pinch and tweak—yet what is it about her that can turn a potentially punishing 45 minutes into something more like an afternoon at a spa? Maybe it's the way she presses up against you, her fingers gently trailing over your lips, then slipping into your mouth. Maybe it's the way she sees through you, even as she's X-raying your bicuspid. Maybe it's simply the way she softly commands you to "open."

And, of course, she does it all within kissing range.

So put on your bib, gargle and relax. This won't hurt a bit.

Check out the latest in dental uniforms. Kim Holliday (opposite) is a hygienist from Alabama. When she's not doing the pick-floss-and-polish grind, she spends her time cross-stitching, cooking and (grit those teeth, gentlemen) hanging out with her husband. Our toothcare team doesn't end with Kim. Meet Tammi Slater (top left), a dental office manager from Arlington, Texas; Oklahoma's Tammy Lynn Brewer (top right), a full-fledged D.D.S. who savors French literature; and Cindy Lancaster (above), a surgical assistant from Rockville, Maryland. For more of this toothsome threesome, turn the page.

OK, ladies, time to grin and bare it. Although Tammi Slater (tailgating, opposite) spends her days among X rays, drill bits and spit bowls, she also enjoys life's toothless pleasures, such as in-line skating, mountain biking and soaking up spring thundershowers. Dr. Tammy Lynn Brewer (below) began doing volunteer work while in dental school. Since then she has taken her skills to homeless shelters and missions, as well as to Mexico and the Amazon. And though Cindy Lancaster (bottom) has a decent pair of hands when it comes to assisting in oral surgery, her dexterity doesn't stop there. She's also a wicked flower arranger.

Things could be worse than making a living in sunny Florida, says Shary Gouthro (risking cavities, below left). Her dental office digs are close enough to the water to keep her water-skiing and beach volleyball talents in top form. For California native Stephanie McDonald (below right), being a dental assistant is just a stop before her real ambition. The U. of Phoenix business student plans to become a big-shot CEO.

Having trouble remembering to brush? Post this picture over the sink and you will be a lean, mean gleam machine. Dental assistant Eva Kweitel (opposite) was born in Poland, attended high school in Queens and now studies medicine at a community college in Miami. Eva also plays tennis, practices dance and studies nutrition. "I love to educate myself," she says. "I want to achieve the ultimate in health and happiness."

Billie Jean Aldrich (chilling out, above) is a dental hygienist from Torrance, California who loves hockey (ice and roller), music (rock, not rap) and the sparkling beaches of Hawaii. Although Sarah Shechtman (right) works for a Florida orthodontist, her true calling is to be "the best mommy ever." (Her one-year-old son is an angel, she brags; we say Mom's heavenly, too.) Lounging on the lips below is Stefanie Caldwell, a water-skier and rafter who assists a dentist in her native Oregon. And San Francisco's Briana Acheson (posing as the prettiest plaque in the West, opposite) stayed on in California to assist a Sonoma County dentist. "I love fast cars, camping and barbecuing," she says. That's fine, Briana—just remember to floss.

Playboy's History of the Sexual Revolution

PART III (1920–1929)

The Jazz Age

ARTICLE BY JAMES R. PETERSEN

AT A SMALL church in Muncie, Indiana, a well-meaning Sunday school teacher talks of the temptation, the spiritual dangers posed by physical comfort, wealth and fame.

"Can you think of any temptation we have today that Jesus didn't have?" he asks.

"Speed!" one boy shouts out.

Speed. Not just the urge to step on the gas in the family Ford, but an entirely new feeling of acceleration and excitement. Thomas Edison tells the readers of The Saturday Evening Post that "the automobile has accustomed everyone to speed, to quickness of action and to control, as well as removing the mystery from machinery. The motion picture has increased the quickness of perception to a really remarkable degree. The motion picture—no matter what one may think of the pictures presented—is the greatest quickener of brain action we have ever had." An ad in the same magazine proclaims: "Go to a motion picture and let yourself go. See brilliant men, beautiful jazz babies, champagne baths, midnight revels, petting parties in the purple dawn, all ending in one terrific smashing climax that makes you gasp."

A Muncie judge interviewed for the 1929 study Middletown tells Robert and Helen Lynd, two sociologists studying small-town America, that a weekly diet of movies is corrupting youth. The habitual "linking of the taking of long chances Rolf Armstrong created timeless images of the American Girl (left) for a calendar company. But it was the fully clothed flapper and her friend (right) who danced and petted their way into history.

The movies held us spellbound. Clara Bow (left) was the "It" girl, possessor of the "strange magnetism which attracts both sexes." Perhaps it was her bee-stung lips, or her dimpled knees (there is a rumor that a publicity shot gave rise to the phrase the bee's knees). She was the ultimate jazz baby. Movies were a universal art form: The world fell in love with Charlie Chaplin's Little Tramp (right). Actors and actresses became a new royalty, but celebrity did not protect them from romantic fiascos. One of Bow's beaux slashed his wrists; unplanned pregnancies prompted Chaplin's first two marriages—both to underage girls.

and the happy ending," he says, is one of the main causes of delinquency. It is also, one suspects, the very soul of America.

A young writer named F. Scott Fitzgerald captures the spirit of the age in stories about petting parties and daring debutantes, one of whom briefly ponders the nature of her reputation and the series of escapades that led to her nickname "Speed." Fitzgerald's fiction reveals a flickering world of silk hats and fur, jeweled throats, women with tight coiffures and men with slick hair, a kaleidoscope of young people made beautiful by the bright lights of a carnival city. His Tales of the Jazz Age names this era of flaming youth, of flappers in short skirts and cloche hats, of college boys in bell-bottoms and raccoon coats, of hip flasks and frivolity, of decadence and debunking, of flagpole sitters and mah-jongg, of sheiks and shebas. Jazz—the music that left behind the score, that wrought sounds from

In the Twenties everyone was sophisticated, or imagined they were. H.L. Mencken, archcurmudgeon and arbiter of taste, railed against the booboisie in the pages of Smart Set (below left). Tabloids and the telephone created a world governed by gossip. We were a culture swept by singular events: The Paul Whiteman band (below, upper right) had one of the first million-sellers with Whispering. Prohibition brought us bootleggers, portable stills and police raids (below right), bathtub gin and speakeasies.

The Twenties gave us F. Scott Fitzgerald (top left), flagpole sitter Shipwreck Kelly (top right) and sheiks and shebas (actress Evelyn Brent in publicity still, far right). Pin-up great Alberto Vargas learned his trade while working with the Ziegfeld Follies (sheet music, above). Less glorifying was the trinket (right)—turn it upside down and cover her face. instruments in ways that were never dreamt of by Johann Sebastian Bach. Jazz—a slang word for sex—now connotes all that is new and modern.

The nation seems to be intoxicated by youth. John Held captures the life of the campus crowd in drawings for Life and College Humor. Joe College and Betty Co-ed set the standard for the decade. Co-eds flatten their breasts with the newfangled brassieres; they not only show a little leg, they draw additional attention to themselves by rolling down their stockings and powdering their knees. They smoke and, if not exactly indulging in sexual escapades themselves, admit Fitzgerald gave the Jazz Age its name, but artist John Held's cartoons gave the flapper (above left reading Sigmund Freud) lasting immortality. Girls shed their inhibitions and occasionally their clothes (above right—a Ziegfeld girl wonders if she has "It"). We were captivated by flaming youth—be it in magazines (below left) or in movies such as Joan Crawford's Our Dancing Daughters (below right). The radio brought us love songs and syncopated jazz rhythms, while Hollywood dream palaces gave us Rudolph Valentino.

Kelly Girl

she has grace and a famous name,
but ms. monaco is very much her own person

PENNSYLVANIA'S Pocono Mountains, with their resort hotels, have the reputation of being a honeymoon paradise. Growing up there, Kelly Monaco knew another part of paradise—the great outdoors. With a home on the boundary of a state game preserve, Kelly and her four sisters put in plenty of time hiking, climbing trees, fishing, camping and swimming. They were taught to skate by their mother, a former Olympic hopeful and figure-skating instructor. They even helped their father, an avid hunter, build tree stands. As a result, Miss April developed into tip-top shape. And when Kelly did resort to working at a resort, she obtained a job as a lifeguard.

Her duties involved more than merely working on her tan, though she also did an excellent job of that. "One night, I had to make three saves," she says. "There's this adrenaline rush that I can't explain." One of her rescues was a boy who had lost consciousness. "It's an amazing feeling to know that if you hadn't been there, this person may have died," she says. And what an amazing feeling it must have been for the kid to wake up and find Kelly reviving him. Perhaps he thought he had died and gone to heaven.

A middle child, Kelly says she enjoys being the center of attention. "I've always wanted to be a star. Growing up, I wanted to be an actress." With four years of high school drama classes and five years of lifeguarding under her bikini, might Kelly be destined to follow the path of Playmate predecessors Pamela Anderson and Donna D'Errico to the set of Baywatch? Kelly would like that very much. But if it doesn't happen, we're sure she'll find a way to make waves on her own.

PLAYBOY'S PARTY JOKES

A country girl moved to the city and soon fell in love with a man she met at a party. After one late night out, they checked into a hotel. As she was about to climb into bed, she spotted a used condom on the floor. "Oh, yuck," she said.

"Don't they use those things where you're from?" he asked.

"Of course they do," she replied, "but we don't skin 'em!"

Why do men like women in leather pants? Because they smell like a new car.

When the concerned wife called about her ailing husband for the third time, the doctor lost his patience. "There isn't a damn thing wrong with your husband," he said. "I checked him out thoroughly. He only thinks he's sick."

A week later the physician ran into the woman on the street. "So how's your husband?" he asked.

"Terrible. Now he thinks he's dead."

PLAYBOY CLASSIC: Paddy had just arrived in New York from Ireland and was invited by one of his American cousins to go to his first baseball game. Seated in the Yankee Stadium bleachers, he watched as a man swung a stick, hit a ball and started toward a white bag down the line. Everyone stood up and yelled, "Run, run!"

Then a second guy came up to the plate, whacked the ball and started down toward the white bag. Everyone stood again and yelled, "Run, run!"

A third batter came up, but this one didn't hit the ball. He didn't even swing. Four times the pitcher pitched, four times the catcher caught. Paddy was completely confused when the batter dropped the stick and started strolling toward the white bag. "Run, run!" Paddy shouted.

"No, he doesn't have to run," his cousin informed him. "He's got four balls."

Paddy's eyes widened as he stood. "Walk with pride, man!" he shouted. "Walk with pride!"

While testing a newly installed computer, an Army officer asked the machine to predict the probability of World War Three and promptly received a one-word answer: "Yes."

Annoyed at the lack of detail, the officer barked, "Yes, what?" Instantly the machine replied, "Yes, sir!"

The last five things a man would say:

- (1) While I'm up, can I get you a beer?
- (2) Her tits are just too big.
- (3) Sometimes I just want to be held.
- (4) Sure, I'd love to wear a condom.
- (5) Fuck the Stanley Cup, let's watch Murphy Brown.

The last five things a woman would say:

- (1) Could our relationship be more physical? I'm tired of being just friends.
- (2) This diamond is way too big!
- (3) I won't even put my lips on that thing unless I get to swallow.
- (4) Sure, let's watch Baywatch!
- (5) My mistake. You must be right again.

Why did the blonde snort Nutrasweet? She thought it was diet coke.

Foster, a compulsive gambler, was hanging around the practice green looking for a mark when a man in golf gear, carrying a white cane and led by a guide dog, walked by. Practically drooling with anticipation, Foster stopped him. "I hear you're a damn good golfer," he said. "Could I interest you in playing a round for a small wager? Say, a thousand dollars?"

"Yes, that would be fine," the blind man replied. "Pick a day."

"Tomorrow," Foster answered with a smirk. "What time?"

"Midnight."

THIS MONTH'S MOST FREQUENT SUBMISSION: After a night of heavy drinking, Gary was scared silly to see two rings around his penis—one red, the other brown. He rushed to his doctor. "There's good news and bad news," the medic said after completing his examination. "The good news is that the red ring is lipstick."

"And the bad news?"

"The brown ring is Skoal."

How do you know you've been kidnapped by a redneck? He's demanding $2 million in unmarked million-dollar bills.

REVISITED:

DOLLY READ

the british bunny who made a splash in america

Where have the years gone? "The other day someone asked about my centerfold," Dolly says. "I'd been saying the photo was taken 25 years ago, then suddenly I realized it's been 30 years!" Here's to 30 more.

When a PLAYBOY photographer asked Dolly Read if she'd like to pose for the May 1966 issue, she thought it was "a smashing good idea." A Bunny-in-training who was living at the Chicago Mansion, Dolly had been one of six British beauties flown to the U.S. in preparation for the opening of the London Playboy Club. The Bristol native was at the door when the first English keyholders arrived, but something about the States had caught her spirit and she jetted back across the Atlantic at the first opportunity. She's lived in Los Angeles ever since, where she has acted in movies (Beyond the Valley of the Dolls) and on TV. She also married comedian Dick Martin. Now it's mostly golf and looking after her poodle and three cats. "I'm happy," she says. "I'd love to go on exactly like this."

PHOTOGRAPHY BY POMPEO POSAR

Dolly has been married for 25 funny years to Dick Martin (above). "When we met, he asked for my phone number, then went on tour for eight weeks. When he finally called, he said, 'Dolly, I think I love you.' It made me laugh, so I forgave him."

Casting for the tragic tale of 1980 Playmate of the Year Dorothy Stratten, director Bob Fosse picked Mariel Hemingway, who had campaigned vigorously for the part. The resultant Star 80 proved another testament to Stratten's unique sensuality—and to Hemingway's acting. In critiquing the film we noted, the killer's "evil does not seem as interesting to us as Dorothy's light." This shot, by PLAYBOY veteran Mario Casilli, is from our January 1984 pictorial.

Joey

Sixties sex kitten, television tigress, Las Vegas headliner—when you're Joey Heatherton, the music never stops. Davenie Johanna Heatherton grew up with her name in lights. As a teen she was a sassy, gum-chewing star on Broadway and in Hollywood, and she hasn't slowed down since. Stop having fun? As Joey herself would say, fahgeddaboutit. Flash back a few moons to Vegas in its heyday: sexy, a little sinful, with no flume rides. Frank's at the Sands, Dino's at the Riviera, Joey's headlining at Caesars. "The place was jumping. Electric. We'd do our shows, give our all to knock out an audience, then get together after," she says. Dinner was at midnight. Joey was the brassiest dame at Sinatra's table, the one crooning and clowning as Frank, Dino and Sammy cheered. "I never laughed harder. Every night was new. I met great artists, great writers and great thieves." In a "dangerously exciting" life she worked and played with Richard Burton, Perry Como, Bob Fosse and other masters. As a favorite guest on Dean Martin's TV show she often sang in bed. "It worked so well they wanted me to do it every time. I'd be out there singing when a bed would roll up behind me. I don't mind being a sexpot, but please!" When Joey laughs she sounds like the Long Island girl she was not long ago. Today, still high-kicking, she splits her time between New York and Los Angeles. "This is my legacy," says Joey of her first PLAYBOY appearance. "I wanted to look pretty—for the men in my life and for me." She was as bold as usual the day she auditioned for this starring role. "I was nervous, of course, going to see a PLAYBOY photographer. But I walked up to Steve Wayda and pulled up my shirt: Ta-daa!" The rest is this story: Joey in "a new kind of performance." That very day she went with Wayda into what Joey calls "the magic room," a private space at Playboy Studio West. She insisted on bringing her own music. Sinatra, of course. The tune was For Once in My Life. And Joey gave her all, as she does for every performance—this time for fans, friends and "my men," a select group of swains who keep her datebook full. Who are they? She's not naming names, only occupations. "Writers, actors and dangerous men," says Joey with a sly smile. "I hope they like seeing this, because I want to make my men proud of me." After half a lifetime in the spotlight, what's a girl to do for an encore? Joey is finishing an autobiography. There may soon be a movie. She has a CD in the works. The best news of all may be plans for a new stage show, for if you want the Joey Heatherton experience, her full Joey de vivre, you have to see her in person. "I always try to knock 'em out, every time out," Joey says. Hers is the old-fashioned kick-out-all-the-stops-and-leave-them-gasping-for-more sort of talent. See for yourself.

"You see why it's called head? Because you're on your way to becoming a headliner!"

"There's nothing in the script about a headache!"

PLAYMATE NEWS

PLAYMATES IN THE SWIM

PLAYBOY hosted a beach party last December at the Mansion, and guess who showed up? A great-looking chorus line of Playmates modeling new Playboy swimwear. Playboy Enterprises, in conjunction with the Virtual Apparel Group, has created a line of beachwear for men and women. The women's line includes one- and two-piece suits and coordinated cover-ups. The men's suits come in both boxers and briefs. Many of the suits carry the Rabbit Head logo. The collection is available at retail stores nationwide. By developing this swimwear line, Playboy continues to look for new ways to appeal to both male and female customers. Unfortunately, guys, the suits don't come with your own personal Playmate.

MARILYN COLE:

"I still get fan mail. A lot of women write for an autographed picture for their husbands, saying it will make the guy's year. It makes me feel good."

OPERATION PLAYMATE UPDATE

"I never felt so appreciated in my life," reminisced Jo Collins about her trip to Vietnam during the war. Collins has been visiting vets in Oklahoma and in Chicago with Playmates Patti Reynolds, Suzi Schott and Jami Ferrell. Playmates Karin Taylor, Alicia Rickter, Bonnie Marino, Christina Smith, Victoria Fuller, Veronica Gamba and Lisa Marie Scott visited veterans' hospitals in California. At a Chicago party held at the National Vietnam Veterans Art Museum, Collins presented the museum a scrapbook of her trip 30 years ago. Miss December 1964 said, "I will always remember what I saw." Operation Playmate will visit vets throughout the year.

GILLIAN GOES DIGITAL

Gillian Bonner, Miss April 1996, has brains as well as looks. She founded a multimedia software company, Black Dragon Productions, and cast herself as Riana Rouge, the title character in a CD-ROM adventure game. She is working on Riana Rouge II, in which her character embarks on a more spiritual journey. Her association with PLAYBOY has helped her to attract more than 1 million visitors each month to her Web site (www.blackdragon.com), which she uses to market her multimedia products. Riana Rouge II, distributed by Konami of America, lets players use an "emotivator" to control its heroine's behavior. Bonner hopes that the new game will appeal to both sexes—strictly on an emotional level, of course.

FAN MAIL

I just received my copy of Victoria Valentino's Centerfold Sweethearts, a newsletter that Miss September 1963 publishes to help fans keep up with some of their favorite Playmates. This issue includes a triumphant photo of December 1982 Playmate Charlotte Kemp crossing the finish line at a Boston Marathon, a two-page story about March 1957 Playmate Sandra Edwards and a lovely tribute to Gail Stanton. But the coup de grâce is definitely the centerfold feature of Victoria's newsletter, in which a fan appears. This must be the first Fan of the Month.

I recently read an article about a neighborhood in Manhattan. It's north of Little Italy. One of the new art galleries in the neighborhood was running an exhibit called Stag Party, featuring artifacts and memorabilia from the heyday of the Playboy Clubs. There were Playboy matchbooks and lighters, swizzle sticks and shot glasses, ties and cuff links. Unfortunately, the exhibit closed, but maybe it will pop up elsewhere.

"I never thought about being in PLAYBOY until one night in Santa Fe. I was out to dinner with my mother when I was approached by a photographer who was shooting for Playboy Germany. He asked me if I wanted to pose and I said no. My mom said, 'Echo, you've got to—it's a great opportunity.' It was, and it has opened a lot of doors. It has been a great experience."—ECHO JOHNSON, Miss January 1993

"In the old days in Hollywood, turning 40 for a woman was the kiss of death. Now, thank God, there are women such as Jessica Lange, Susan Sarandon and Farrah Fawcett who are making it cause for celebration. Beauty makes people suspect that you don't have brains. I don't care how beautiful you are, because if you don't feel beautiful inside, you won't have any self-confidence. You have to work on your spiritual side. In older actresses and models who are successful, you can see that it works."—LILLIAN MÜLLER, Miss August 1975; PMOY 1976
